

RF US Fund (USD)

Quarterly Report, Q1 2025
Issue 17—2600004/100512

What Does Trump 2.0 Have in Store?

The Fund was down -1.46% and -1.58% in March and Q1 respectively. Over the last five years the fund average 5.64%. In early 2023 the decision was made to reduce downside exposure to equity markets based on expectations of a US recession. This tactical decision was made to reduce downside exposure and provide liquidity to take advantage of an expected equity market correction. While our decision was premature, we have reduced downside risk and the recent decrease in US interest rates is beneficial.

The trade war initiated by President Trump introduces a significant element of uncertainty and potential downside risk to the fund's equity holdings. The imposition and threat of tariffs can disrupt international trade and global supply chains, leading to decreased corporate earnings and overall market volatility. This directly impacts the value of equity holdings, particularly those of multinational corporations with significant international operations.

For the fund, this “higher-for-longer” rate environment presents both challenges and opportunities. Elevated rates continue to pressure longer-duration bond prices, potentially leading to mark-to-market losses. However, the fund benefits from higher reinvestment yields and attractive income opportunities across shorter-duration and higher-quality securities. As rate volatility persists, the fund is strategically positioned to manage duration risk while capturing enhanced yield in the front end of the curve.
